Hi.

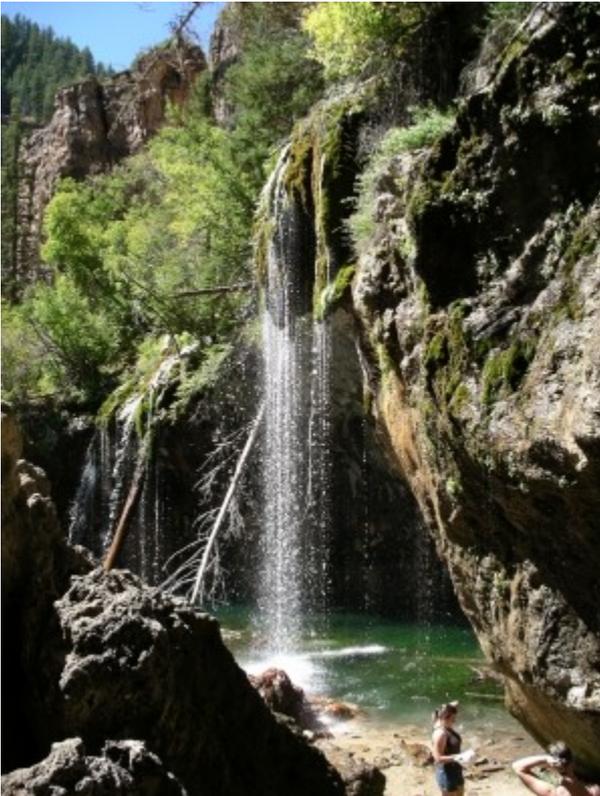

Note reflection of sun on the rabbit brush. We found summer. Amazing what a few thousand feet down will do.

This is Glenwood Canyon, close to the trail head for Hanging Lake. Here the Colorado meanders along just off I-70, west and south of Eagle. Hanging Lake is a pool residing in a depression left by a receding glacier.

Um, the trail is steep.

At the top are twin falls. They pour into a luminescent green basin that teems with trout. Above these falls are yet another falls, one that you can walk behind and under. A marvelous destination.

Parting Shot: Not very many flowers survive, much less thrive, at 10,000 ft. Not many annuals live through the mountain frost. But because they can do these things, pansies decorate every town and neighborhood in the high country. Next time someone calls you "Pansy", stand a little taller.
