Bring your own coffee; bring your own Tide; get a nice campsite; find a restaurant with a view; to which we add: get up early.

Today we went back to Arches. Had some unfinished business. Hiked the length of the main Devil's Garden trail, all the way to Dark Angel. It got up to 95 in the shade. And there was no shade.

This is Devil's Garden. Those are fins. One of them is part of the trail - you walk lengthwise on the top. Wheee!

The thing about these rocks is this: they always change the way they look. When you move laterally, they change. When you change elevation, the rocks change. When the sun moves, they change. It's supernatural. It's addictive.

Broken Arch. Not in danger of falling:

There are 2 kinds of critters we can get a good picture of: dumb ones (lizards and bugs) and moochers (birds and small mammals). Here's one. Wanted our lunch (don't even ask):
