Tonight Sally did a fantastic job of decorating Deborah's home. Deborah learned to trust the designer, and now has the livable space she always dreamed about.

Although the reception is a little fuzzy, we're getting HGTV here in Taos. It's today's highlight.

Today started with we couldn't find anywhere to get breakfast on our way out of Farmington. We ate trail food. Then we went back to the trading post on the Res where we found this great deal on Navajo pottery. It was closed. We stopped at two other places. They were closed. Well, at least there was Bandelier.

We hurried to Bandelier National Monument to climb the 140 feet of ladders to Cerimonial Cave. We got there. They were just closing the access road for repairs. Well, at least there was Taos.

Ahhh, Taos. Home to celebrities. Artistic capital of the Southwest.

Taos looks like this.

Taos looks like this going out of town. Taos looks like this coming into town. Taos looks like this in the middle of town. Ahhh, Taos.

Went to cheesy shops. Saw creepy people. Ate greasy, overpriced calamari. Turned on the TV. Good night.
